NSA CHIEF CONCERNED ABOUT POSSIBLE US ELECTION HACKS

1 American intelligence agencies are concerned about reports that foreign governments may be attempting to undermine the Nov. 8 U.S. elections through cyber attacks, Admiral Mike Rogers, the director of the National Security Agency, said on Tuesday. "We continue to be actively concerned," Rogers told a Senate hearing, responding to a question from Sen. John McCain, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Marcel Lettre, Under Secretary of Defense for Intelligence, testified that the government is taking any such activities "quite seriously" and said an "aggressive investigation" is under way. McCain noted that one of the two states in which media reports said there was evidence of attempted Russian hacking was his home state, Arizona. REUTERS

US SEES STRONGER MEDIAN HOUSEHOLD INCOME, LESS POVERTY

2 The median U.S. household income rose last year, its first significant annual increase since 2007, and helped push down the number of people living in poverty to 43.1 million, federal government data released on Tuesday showed. About 29 million people did not have health insurance in 2015, down from 33 million in the previous year, the Census Bureau said in its annual Income, Poverty and Health Insurance Coverage and Supplemental Poverty Measure report. The poverty rate fell to 13.5 percent from 14.8 percent in 2014, the report said. Median income rose 5.2 percent to $56,500 from $53,700 in 2014, in large part due to increases in employment, Census officials told reporters on a conference call. The poverty rate has continued to edge down in the wake of the 2007-2009 recession amid a tepid recovery. REUTERS

NC LOSES COLLEGE SPORTS CHAMPIONSHIPS OVER 'BATHROOM' LAW

3 The governing board for U.S. college athletics said it will move seven championship sporting events out of North Carolina to protest a state law it deems discriminatory to transgender individuals. It is illegal for anyone in the state to use a public restroom that does not match the gender they were assigned at birth. The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) cited the law in its decision to relocate the events, which include the first two rounds of the "March Madness" men's basketball playoffs. Two months ago the National Basketball Association moved its 2017 pro All-Star Game from North Carolina to New Orleans for the same reason. REUTERS

Thousands gather in Philly to hear Obama stump for Hillary

"We can't afford to have someone treat this like a reality show."

sam.newhouse@metro.us

The Democratic Party has started pulling out the big guns in the race for the White House, as President Barack Obama personally implored voters Tuesday in Philadelphia to get out there and campaign to help Hillary Clinton win.

A crowd of thousands packed Eakins Oval by the Art Museum to hear Obama confront some of the most common criticism and attacks that have dogged Clinton and blame the media for judging her more harshly than her opponent Donald Trump.

"She's been accused of everything you can imagine, and has been subjected to more scrutiny and what I believe is more unfair criticism than anybody out here," Obama told the crowd, to cheers.

"I sure do get frustrated with the way this campaign gets covered. Do you mind if I just vent for a second?"

Obama went on to compare the most common criticisms of Clinton — her transparency, her private email server, and the Clinton Foundation's activities — to the criticisms of Trump. He pointed out that Trump hasn't released any of his personal tax returns.

"One candidate's family foundation has saved countless lives around the world," Obama said his former secretary of state and 2008 rival for the Democratic presidential nomination. "The other candidate's foundation took money other people gave to his charity and then bought a 6-foot-tall painting of himself."

As the crowd roared with laughter, Obama comically added, "At least he had the taste not to go for the 10-foot version."

But Clinton's polls numbers may be slipping as her strong lead coming out of the Democratic National Convention has begun to erode. A new Quinnipiac poll released last week found Clinton with a five-point lead in the battleground state of Pennsylvania, half of what she had a month ago. Polls show a dead heat in Florida between the two candidates.

Meanwhile, the Washington Post reported that Democratic voters in the state aren't very enthusiastic, that African-American voters are "lukewarm" and won't just vote to defeat Trump, and that low turnout is expected, which could hurt Clinton.

Obama's visit, which shut down roads through Center City and snarled traffic all day, was likely planned to keep the campaign's energy up. Bernie Sanders is scheduled to campaign for Clinton at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh on Friday.

"My most important message is we cannot take this election for granted," Obama told the crowd. "We've got to fight for this thing. … We can't afford to have someone treat this like a reality show."

A few dozen activists gathered to protest the Dakota Access Pipeline outside of President Obama's speech on Eakins Oval. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Carson Wentz has NFL's top selling jersey, gets shout-out from President Obama

After Carson Wentz's impressive NFL debut against the Browns Sunday (a 29-10 Eagles win), a reporter asked the rookie if he was ready for what comes next — being a star quarterback in the city of Philadelphia.

The QB responded: "I will see what happens. At the end of the day, for me it's still just about playing football. I have to block out the noise, both good and bad, and just get back to work. That's what it's about and the goal is to go 1-0 each week."

Tuesday, President Barrack Obama visited Philadelphia to stump for Hillary Clinton. To open his address in front of the Art Museum, the president mentioned the Eagles' standout.

"Some of you may have seen Joe Biden at the Eagles game," he said. "He told me, 'Barack, you gotta get on the Wentz wagon. We got a new quarterback. We got hope in Philly.'"

"I am a Bears fan," Obama continued. "We play Philly next Monday night. So I got to stick with my team, but I am going to scout out what all the fuss is about."

A few scattered boos and laughs followed, but it seems clear that Wentz, the youthful looking redhead from North Dakota, is the most important man in Philadelphia sports. Sunday he threw for 278 yards, two touchdowns and had no interceptions — the best debut for a rookie quarterback in Philly in more than 30 years.

Commerce has responded. According to Fanatics, which runs NFL Shop and more than 300 shops that sell NFL gear across the country, Wentz has had the highest-selling jersey since Sunday, followed by Odell Beckham Jr., Tom Brady, Dak Prescott and Antonio Brown.

Expect to see more and more No. 11 jerseys across the city as the season continues.

Lower Merion schools hire lawyers at $425 an hour to appeal ruling against tax hike
After a judge ruled last month that Lower Merion must revoke its 4.4-percent tax hike for the 2016-17 school year, the school district decided to fight back.

At a school board meeting Monday, the board approved the appointment of an attorney with Drinker Biddle for $425 per hour to oversee the district's appeal against Montgomery County Common Pleas Judge Joseph Smyth's ruling.

But tensions have been high at this Main Line school district, which recently has been shown to have had budget surpluses at the end of each year, despite its projected deficits.

"Fuzzy math," Smyth called it last month, when he ordered the tax revocation.

But the district has defended the hike, saying that "unprecedented growth" in enrollment over the past few years has created a need for the surplus, which will contribute to pensions and new buildings. District members have said there has been a 40-percent enrollment increase over the last two decades.

But according to the Philadelphia Inquirer, the district has continued to predict large budget deficits year after year, while raking in cash by the summer.

Smyth said the district's anticipated $9.3 million deficit for 2016-17 would require less than a 2.4 percent tax increase.

In Pennsylvania, Trump proposes child care deduction tax break

His daughter, Ivanka, has championed the issue of child care.

Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump proposes to allow families to deduct the cost of child care expenses from income taxes, his campaign said, a move aimed at bolstering his support among women voters.

Trump was to lay out the plan in a Tuesday evening speech in the Philadelphia suburb of Aston, Pennsylvania, his latest attempt to construct a policy framework that he would use for governing if elected over Democrat Hillary Clinton.

Trump was to be introduced at the event by his daughter, Ivanka, who has championed the issue of child care as an influential voice in his campaign. She told reporters on a conference call that she was involved in developing the plan.

"I'm very passionate about this," she said.

Trump's support among women voters has lagged. Overall, he has risen to a more competitive position against Clinton in national opinion polls and in battleground states where the election is likely to be decided.

Polls show the race tightening in the crucial state of Pennsylvania. A Quinnipiac University poll last week said Clinton led 48 percent to 43 percent for Trump there, a reduction from her 10-point lead a month ago.

Trump's plan would change the tax code to let parents deduct from their income taxes child care expenses for up to four children and elderly dependents, his campaign said.

It would be available for individuals earning less than $250,000 a year or under $500,000 for couples filing jointly.

Trump campaign officials did not detail the overall cost of the program. A senior official said it would be part of Trump's plan to overhaul the tax code and would end up not adding to deficit spending in the federal budget.

Trump would offer child care spending rebates to lower-income taxpayers through the existing Earned Income Tax Credit. The campaign said this could mean tax rebates as high as $1,200 for eligible families each year.

Trump also would create new Dependent Care Savings Accounts to allow families to set aside money "to foster their children's development and offset elder care for their parents or adult dependents," the campaign said. Individuals could contribute up to $2,000 a year tax free.

The New York businessman also is proposing guaranteed six weeks of paid maternity leave. He would accomplish this by amending the existing unemployment insurance that companies are required to carry.

The benefit would apply only when employers do not offer paid maternity leave, and would be paid for by offsetting reductions in the federal unemployment insurance program so that taxes are not raised.

Philly gears up for free block party this weekend

WRITTEN BY A.P SINGER

The kids may officially be back at school, but that doesn't mean summer is over just yet. South Philadelphia will be sending the season off with a bang this Saturday with an all-out block party hosted by Methodist Hospital – Jefferson Health. Outdoor festivities, local eats, and live entertainment are all on the agenda.

The family-friendly fun kicks off at 10 a.m. and will have a little something for everyone—including free admission and one free meal ticket thrown in for good measure. Guests can cash it in at one of the Philly-famous food trucks setting up shop at the party, including Bombay Local Pizza and Nick's Roast Beef.

Of course it isn't really a block party without some bumping music. They've got you covered with a live DJ who'll be spinning all day, providing the ultimate summer playlist. If you're more of a culture vulture, you're also in for a treat. Both All That Jazz Dance Studio and the Philadelphia Performing Arts Charter School are on the set list.

Saturday's event won't have sports fans feeling left out, either. Special guests from our local sports teams will be in attendance. Looking to score free tickets to an Eagles, Sixers or Flyers game? Put Saturday's event on your calendar; there will be ticket giveaways throughout the day. You'll also get the chance to win Eagles merchandise (like autographed memorabilia and other cool giveaways) before taking part in a number of exciting raffles all day long.

A lot's in store for the kiddos, as well. Those who've got little ones in tow can hit up the face-painting booth, as well as the many carnival games and balloon artists who'll be sprinkled around the event.

This weekend's block party is all about bringing the community together to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of Methodist and Jefferson hospitals coming together. The union has been nothing short of an extraordinary success.

Methodist Hospital is an iconic community landmark in Philadelphia, delivering unmatched care and compassionate service to local residents and beyond. Saturday's block party will be a time to come together and celebrate our community, which would be nothing without the wonderful people who call this place home.

Ready for one last summer blowout? Head over to the hospital entrance on 13th and Wolf Streets between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. on Saturday, September 17!

Radnor elementary school on lockdown after bear sighting

This was not the first bear sighting in the Radnor area in recent days.

A Radnor elementary school was placed on a lockdown Tuesday following recent bear sightings in the area.

As many as three bear sightings Tuesday morning in the area around the rear of Ithan Elementary School on Clyde Road prompted the lockdown, according to CBS Philly.

"Radnor Police and the Pennsylvania Game Commission completed a thorough investigation of the wooded area on the perimeter of our grounds where a bear was sighted the morning of Sept. 13," a statement from the Delaware County school read. "They did not locate the bear during this search.

"Radnor Police are confident our students are safe and our property is secure, however as a precautionary measure we will remain in a Level I Lockdown for the remainder of the school day, which means students will be kept indoors."

A member of the school district security staff was assigned to monitor the area where the bear was sighted on Tuesday and Wednesday.

"A Radnor police officer will be here tomorrow to provide an extra layer of security," a school official said. "The police are also shutting down the township's two pathways that lead to the wooded area for 24 hours."

Officials also reported the sighting of a large black bear Saturday night in the 400 block of Roundhill in the St. Davids section of Radnor Township.

Residents are advised that if they come in contact with a bear, to not approach it for any reason, and to contact 911 immediately.

900 Penn women sign letter against those 'complicit in rape culture'

More than 900 members of sororities and coed fraternities at the University of Pennsylvania have responded to a crude party invitation emailed to freshmen women by signing a letter opposing the "rape culture" on campus and those "complicit" in it.

The letter, which can be read in its entirety at Metro.us, condemns the emailed invitation as "blatantly [objectifying] women with sexist and implicit instructions to act and dress in a sexual way solely for male benefit."

The email, sent on Aug. 31 by unaffiliated, off-campus group OZ, invites girls, but not "teases," to a party called "Wild Wednesday." It urges female guests to "please wear something tight." Written in the form of a crude poem, the invitation claims it's only looking "for the fun ones."

Signed by 920 affiliated and nonaffiliated sorority members, as well as women in coed fraternities at the school, the letter continues:

"This incident is not isolated or unique to the organization that sent the email — it stems from an overarching culture on college campuses across the country which targets women and brands them as inferiors, or simply objects for the male gaze. Smaller scale and interpersonal incidents have become warning tales to new freshmen, shared between sorority members to brace themselves against past and unspoken incidents of rape, sexual violence and sexual misconduct by men at Penn, disproportionately occurring in fraternities."

Citing studies, the letter says that fraternity men are three times more likely to commit acts of sexual violence than their nonaffiliated counterparts, and women in sororities are 74 percent more likely to experience sexual assault than other college women.

"Together we will not stand to be objectified, passive or overlooked. We refuse to allow the legacy of rape culture to burden future students," the letter ends.

Last Tuesday, fliers with the title "This is what rape culture looks like" superimposed over copies of the OZ invite popped up all over UPenn's campus, and provided a phone number for victims of sexual assault to reach counselors at the Penn Women's Center.

The story quickly gained national attention, with outlets including The Huffington Post, Buzzfeed, Seventeen Magazine and USA Today covering the issue. Meanwhile, politicians and celebrities urged an end to the culture. ALEXIS SACHDEV

Probe blames Delta pilot for 2015 NYC runway accident

A Delta Air Lines jetliner rests on a berm at LaGuardia Airport March 5, 2015, in Queens. FDNY VIA GETTY IMAGES

The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board on Tuesday faulted a Delta Air Lines pilot for a March 2015 incident in which a Boeing MD-88 veered off the runway at New York's LaGuardia Airport, resulting in minor injuries to 29 passengers.

The report said the pilot's use of excessive reverse thrust during landing led to a loss of directional control and the jet's departure from the snow-covered runway.

The report also said the flight and cabin crews did not conduct a timely or effective evacuation for a number of reasons, including the fact that damage to the aircraft resulted in the loss of the interphone and public address system, which delayed an announcement to evacuate the aircraft.

The evacuation of the plane with 127 passengers and crew took 17 minutes and did not start until six minutes after landing, the NTSB said.

The plane struck a chain-link fence before coming to rest on a snow-covered embankment just feet from Flushing Bay with its left wing tank leaking fuel.

"Make no mistake: This was a very close call," NTSB chairman Christopher Hart said on Tuesday.

LaGuardia, the smallest of the New York area's three major airports, was temporarily closed after the mishap.

The report said the captain faced situational stress at the time of landing, which prevented him from immediately recognizing the use of excessive reverse thrust.

Delta said in a statement it had cooperated in the probe and "we respect their findings, conclusions and recommendations. Delta leaders will use this NTSB guidance to further enhance the safety of our global operation."

The NTSB report also raised concerns about the initial uncertainty about the number of passengers aboard the plane, which didn't include two lap-held children. The report also faulted the Federal Aviation Administration's airport winter safety guidance as "not sufficiently clear about the timing and need for updated runway condition reports."

Wells Fargo may take more disciplinary action over sales abuses

Wells Fargo paid $185 million in fines and $5M to customers after reaching a settlement with three regulators over sales abuses as employees opened sham credit card, debit card and other accounts to meet aggressive sales targets. The phantom accounts resulted in some customers being hit with fees for insufficient funds.

Wells Fargo & Co may take additional disciplinary action over sales abuses that led to $185 million in penalties and the firing of 5,300 employees, Chief Financial Officer John Shrewsberry said at an industry conference on Tuesday.

He said the bank will "take a big wide fresh look at who knew what and when and what else might have been done."

Shrewsberry said the review would impact people "at all levels of the organization."

The incident has also brought attention to the compensation of Carrie Tolstedt, who stepped down as head of the bank's Community Banking unit in July. According to the bank's 2015 proxy, Tolstedt received more than $9 million in cash and stock in 2015, and she has more than 2.5 million in Wells Fargo shares which would be worth about $120 million at Tuesday's prices.

Wells Fargo GETTY IMAGES

Wells Fargo announced Tuesday it would eliminate product sales goals for retail bankers, one of several recent measures it has taken to try and get in front of a gathering public storm over the sales scandal.

In a interview with CNBC Tuesday, U.S. Treasury Secretary Jack Lew said the enforcement action highlighted "bad behavior" by Wells Fargo, adding "how that flows through in terms of next consequences is going to depend on the facts of the case."

A Wells Fargo spokeswoman declined to comment on Lew's remarks. A Wells Fargo spokeswoman said Tolstedt was not fired, but "made a decision to retire at the end of this year." Tolstedt could not be reached.

The issue has also attracted the attention of U.S. Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, and at least seven U.S. senators have signed letters calling for an investigation.

Supreme Court leaves Ohio voting restrictions in place

The U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday refused to reinstate for the Nov. 8 general election Ohio's so-called Golden Week voting procedures, when people could register and cast ballots in the same week, that had been abolished by a Republican-backed law.

The high court rejected a request by Ohio Democrats and let stand an August ruling by the Cincinnati-based 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that upheld the 2014 law, which imposed new restrictions on when people could register to vote and cast ballots. Ohio Democrats argued that the law had a discriminatory impact on black voters.

The law was one of numerous passed in recent years in Republican-governed states that Democrats and civil rights activists have said were intended to make it more difficult for voters including African-Americans, Hispanics and others who tend to back Democratic candidates to cast ballots.

"This much is perfectly clear: Ohio is a place where it is easy to vote and hard to cheat. In fact, with voting now slated to begin in less than a month for the November election, Ohio is one of the easiest states in the nation in which to register and cast your ballot," Ohio Secretary of State Jon Husted, a Republican, said.

"Ohio Republicans can keep trying to make it harder for people to vote, but we will continue to fight them at every turn," Ohio Democratic Party Chairman David Pepper said.

The appeals court had reversed a May ruling by a U.S. district judge who blocked the law and found that it violated voters' rights.

The Supreme Court's brief order did not note any dissenting votes on the shorthanded eight-member court evenly divided between liberals and conservatives.

Ohio's Republican-controlled legislature abolished Golden Week and shortened early voting to 29 days from 35 days. Ohio often is a pivotal state in U.S. presidential elections.

Other state laws have required specific forms of photo identification to cast ballots, cut early voting periods and made it more difficult to restore voting rights to people with past criminal convictions. REUTERS

Pardon for Edward Snowden seen unlikely

The U.S. government will not budge on its demand that former National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden return to face prosecution for stealing thousands of classified intelligence documents, despite new calls for President Barack Obama to pardon him, U.S. officials said on Tuesday.

The officials said they expect Snowden's supporters to use the Thursday release of "Snowden" — directed by veteran filmmaker Oliver Stone — to mount a public campaign demanding a pardon before Obama leaves office in January.

Snowden, who lives in Moscow, is scheduled to appear via video link on Wednesday at a New York press conference, where advocates from human rights groups will call for a pardon.

They argue that Snowden performed a public service by exposing excessive and intrusive electronic spying by the intelligence agency and its English-speaking allies, including Britain's Government Communications Headquarters.

In an interview published by The Guardian on Tuesday, Snowden said the U.S. Congress, the courts and the president all "changed their policies" as a result of his disclosures, and that "there has never been any public evidence that any individual came to harm as a result."

White House spokesman Josh Earnest said on Monday that Snowden is charged with "serious crimes, and it's the policy of the administration that Mr. Snowden should return to the United States and face those charges."

Two other U.S. officials said there are no discussions inside the Justice Department about granting him a pardon.

Snowden THE GUARDIAN VIA GETTY IMAGES

Some officials have acknowledged that Snowden raised legitimate questions about the extent and effectiveness of some electronic eavesdropping, particularly the NSA's sweeping collection of "metadata" on domestic telephone calls by Americans, a practice that was curtailed after his revelations.

Other officials, however, say the material Snowden gave the media included sensitive details about the locations and operations of U.S. and allied global spying operations, some of which were compromised. REUTERS

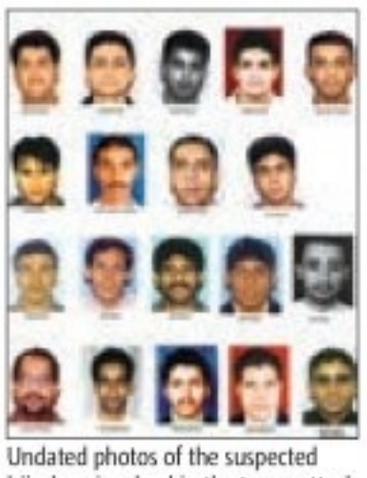
Democrats expect Senate will oppose Obama on Saudi 9/11 bill

The Democratic leaders of the U.S. Senate said on Tuesday they expected the chamber would vote to override President Barack Obama's promised veto of a bill allowing relatives of victims of the Sept. 11 attacks to sue Saudi Arabia.

It would be the first override of an Obama veto since he took office in January 2009.

The "Justice Against Sponsors of Terrorism Act," known as JASTA, would remove sovereign immunity, preventing lawsuits against governments, for countries found to be involved in terrorist attacks on U.S. soil.

Fifteen of the Sept. 11 hijackers who crashed airliners in the 2001 attacks were Saudi nationals. The Saudi government, which strongly denies responsibility, has lobbied against the bill.



Undated photos of the suspected hijackers involved in the terror attack on the United States on Sept. 11, 2001. FBI/GETTY IMAGES

But some members of Congress have become increasingly restive about relations with Saudi Arabia, long an important player in U.S. Middle East policy.

Harry Reid, the Senate's Democratic leader, said he supported the measure. "They're not one of my favorite countries," he said of the Saudis.

Richard Durbin, the No. 2 Senate Democrat, said, "We're all on the record supporting it, so at this point I think it's a heavy lift for the president to have his veto sustained."

A White House spokesman said in a briefing on Tuesday it had received the bill, but did not offer updates about timing of a veto. The Constitution gives the president 10 days after receiving a bill to veto it before it automatically becomes law.

Hillary Clinton server technicians rebuff questions from Congress

Paul Combetta and Bill Thornton repeatedly invoked their constitutional right not to incriminate themselves during about 10 minutes of questioning while under oath before the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee.

Two computer technicians declined to answer questions from U.S. lawmakers on Tuesday about the unauthorized private email system that Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton used during her tenure as U.S. secretary of state.

The investigation of Clinton's email system has become a troublesome issue for her presidential campaign, with Republican rival Donald Trump saying a recent finding by federal investigators that she mishandled classified government secrets in her email should disqualify her from office.

A third technician, Bryan Pagliano, did not appear at Tuesday's hearing despite a subpoena from the committee ordering his testimony. Lawmakers can jail people who defy congressional subpoenas.

Combetta and Thornton work for Platte River Networks, the Denver technology firm that began managing Clinton's email servers soon after she left the State Department in 2013. They invoked their Fifth Amendment protection from self-incrimination to each question from lawmakers and Jason Chaffetz, the committee's Republican chairman, excused them out of what he called "respect" for their rights.

Ranking member Rep. Elijah Cummings listens during a hearing on examining preservation of State Department federal records before the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee on Tuesday. GETTY IMAGES

Elijah Cummings, the committee's most senior Democratic member, expressed sympathy for the technicians, saying the Republicans were only trying to use them to embarrass Clinton.

Chaffetz criticized Pagliano, who managed Clinton's server while she was the nation's most senior diplomat, for not complying with the subpoena and said the committee would decide after the hearing whether to punish him. Pagliano, who joined the State Department with Clinton but also was paid privately by her for working on her server, was given a form of immunity from prosecution in 2015 for cooperating with a federal investigation into the mishandling of classified information over the server.

Clinton has said she regrets using the system in her New York home's basement for work. Voters have repeatedly said in surveys the decision contributes to a feeling she is untrustworthy.

The hearing was one of a series called by the committee's Republican leadership to answer questions the lawmakers say have been left unanswered by a report released this summer by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

FBI director James Comey said in July there was evidence that Clinton and her staff may have broken the law with their "extremely careless" handling of classified government secrets but concluded there was insufficient grounds to prosecute. REUTERS

BRIEF

LinkedIn's Hoffman: Trump presidency would be 'terrifying' for policy

LinkedIn cofounder Reid Hoffman said on Tuesday that Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump would have a "terrifying" effect on domestic and foreign policy if elected.

The comments came one day after Hoffman published an article on Medium.com pledging support to a CrowdPac crowdfunding campaign that promises to donate to veterans causes if Trump releases his tax returns.

Hoffman said in his article that he will match five times the crowdfunded amount to donate up to $5 million. The campaign has raised more than $90,000.

Hoffman told a crowd at TechCrunch Disrupt 2016 in San Francisco that he was "in denial" about the possibility of a Trump presidency but encouraged by efforts to hold the candidate accountable.

Trump's campaign did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Trump is facing criticism for not releasing tax returns, a political practice that is not required by law but has been done by every White House nominee since 1973. REUTERS

Internet idiots think Kurt Cobain is alive and living in Peru

Dear users of the internet: You are dumb. This weekend you thought Hillary Clinton had a body double. Now you think Kurt Cobain is alive and well and living in Peru — as a Kurt Cobain impersonator. In a new, predictably awesome conspiracy theory — made semilegitimate by reliably hysterical and long-headline-writing British tabloid Daily Mail — it's claimed that Cobain faked his death, hopped down to South America and is now living a happy life as Ramiro Saavedra, a man who looks nothing like Cobain and, oh, is 32 years old. That means Cobain, who took his life in 1994 at the age of 27, has managed to age only five years, and also look Peruvian. It's weak sauce that should never have escaped the depths of Reddit. Instead it got big enough that Nirvana's Facebook page had to write a sarcastic post addressing the issue: "It is true, Kurt is alive. He needed time to learn to play the guitar with his right hand. Finding left-handed guitars is not easy. We are so happy to have him back and forgive him for all of the sadness that we have held so deeply in our hearts." To theorists' credit, Saavedra does sound a lot like him, as heard in a performance of "Come as You Are" dug up from 2012. And for the lunatics who have taken over the internet and made it a miserable place to hang, perhaps that's enough.

Monica down to make up with Brandy, but not the other way around

The dream of the '90s is still very much alive for one half of the "Boy is Mine" duo — but for the other, the only thing alive is the drama.

On the Season 3 premiere of "The Real," Monica responded to Brandy's recent Twitter diss by saying it didn't bother her at all, and that she would definitely collaborate with her old singing partner in the future.

To brief you on the Twitter triflin': A fan had tweeted at Brandy, asking if she would participate in Monica's #Sogone challenge, and all Brandy said was, "Chile, bye."

But for Monica, her beef with Brandy is in the past: "Honestly, the old me and the new me are two different things," she told Loni Love on "The Real." "This journey of self-progression and self-love and empowerment that I'm on, I can't go backwards."

Monica also praised Brandy, saying, "I've always thought that she was one of the most legendary people and has one of the most amazing voices" and waxed nostalgic about the "very special time" back when she, Brandy and Aaliyah were all close.

Well, Brandy took Monica's olive branch and basically set it on fire. On a now-deleted Instagram post, she wrote some pretty petty hashtags that were clearly about Monica: "#IknowTHEREALStoryThatEverybodyDoesn'tKnow and #PositivityIsTheOneThingYouShouldNotFake."

Maybe the writing was on the wall. This verse from their old hit is more relevant than ever:

"You can say what you wanna say / What we have you can't take / From the truth you can't escape / I can tell THE REAL from the fake."

Middle school coifs

Your go-to look for band recital got chic updates at Brock Collection and Marissa Webb. Twist and tie back hair away from the face for a look that's effortless but polished. At Marissa Webb, TRESemme stylist Jeanie Syfu aimed for "achievable drama," using the Extra Firm Control Mousse to prep damp hair before blowdrying with a paddle brush. She then parted the hair down the middle, twisting back the top sections starting at the ears, before securing the ponytail.

Ditch your liner

Lower lash lines got a break this season, with the likes of Band of Outsiders, Jason Wu and Tommy Hilfiger going for an undefined eye. Instead, the basically bare looks put an emphasis on extremely healthy, glowing, plump skin. Maybelline's Grace Lee, who led artists at Band of Outsiders, says she kept her models fresh-faced and dewy by applying the brand's Dream Cushion Foundation (out in January) with a damp sponge and using color corrector to pat out any imperfections.

Get negative

Negative-space nails make the traditional French manicure cool again. Tanya Taylor, Creatures of Comfort and Rebecca Minkoff all featured manis with bare bases and a slender swipe of color either at the tip or the base line. What makes the look pop is cheeky color choices and placement — there's nothing "ladies who lunch" about this extremely cool, low-maintenance update.

We can finally trade near-impossible-to-wear anti-statement nudes for complex, layered lip colors that make a serious impact. DKNY's sparkling smiles came courtesy of Pat McGrath's glitter-packed Lust 004 lip kits, while two-toned lips (shaded in with two hues of hot pink MAC lip pencils) provided a come-hither effect at Cushnie et Ochs. Creatures of the Wind gave their matte lips a velvety finish, with lead makeup artist Mark Carrasquillo dipping a fluffy brush in pigment powder to dust over Nars' red lip. So plush.

Phoebe Waller-Bridge of 'Fleabag' talks saving guinea pigs and sex on TV

You can't do that on television ... or can you?

jennifer.logue@metro.us

"Fleabag" is a new show that falls somewhere between the quirky, relatable humanity of "Bridget Jones" and the naughty, in-your-face raunchiness of "Girls." Phoebe Waller-Bridge, who wrote and created the series, is also its female lead — an outwardly confident, beautiful and hilarious character who harbors a hidden darkness. We got to chat with Phoebe about the show's origins and why killing guinea pigs is not cool for TV but anal sex totally is.

How were you initially inspired to write "Fleabag"?

The genesis of ["Fleabag] was that I was asked to write a one-woman show for a 10-minute slot in a London theater by a friend of mine. When that 10 minutes was written, a couple of people said we should take it to Edinburgh, and we got a slot in the Edinburgh festival. She's a woman who's just trying to hide something, basically hide a pain and then, on top of all of that, seem like she's completely together and funny and sexually confident and in control of everything. So much of my 20s was trying to convince people that about myself.

What was it like transitioning from a stage show to television?

Sort of like hitting my head really hard against a wall for a year. The first difficult stage was that I played all the characters in the stage play, so I had to let go of all of them and then handing them over and allowing them to have their own lives. The first thing that I had to suddenly focus on was building these characters lives outside of "Fleabag."

You mention you felt a lot like this character in your 20s. Is "Fleabag" inspired by real-life experiences?

To some degree it was a very personal piece. A lot of the anecdotal things either almost happened to me or did happen to me. Or that I kind of imagined would be hilarious if they happened to me. Like my friends and family are very healthy and alive. There's a lot of people sort of in it in spirit but no portraits or anything.

Do we ever learn your character's real name in the show?

Yeah. I knew that "Fleabag" was going to be the title of the play, and in turn, it would be implied that that's her name. Yeah, she doesn't have a name. I kept thinking if I called her something it would be "Sarah" or "Annabelle."

So this show premiered overseas on BBC Three in July. Were they cool with you covering raunchier subject matter like anal sex?

Phoebe Waller-Bridge stars in the new series, "Fleabag," premiering on Amazon Prime Video on September 16. AMAZON STUDIOS

They loved it. They love all that stuff. I think there's been a real appetite for female sexual candor. "Girls" blew the doors open for that kind of thing. It builds to something and it means something and it's not just her flinging words around for shock value. She uses that candor to gain control. There was one thing they wouldn't let me do in the play, which was kill the guinea pig.

She killed a guinea pig?
In the play.

Oh my God. Yeah, that wouldn't fly.
Yeah, they were like you can do whatever you like, but you cannot kill the guinea pig. BBC saved the guinea pig.

Do you think American audiences are more prudish when it comes to sex?
The thing about "Fleabag" is that it's the language that's really explicit. I think that actually does shock people more. What was really important to me was that there's no kind of nudity or tits or ass in it, because it's about the power of the language. I guess they're used to seeing people having sex more than people just talking to us directly about it.

"Fleabag" premieres on Amazon Prime Video this Friday, Sept. 16.

Spill the Beans adds a charitable component to its storytelling series

The next event is Wednesday, Sept. 28, and proceeds will help the homeless.

MIKE FENN
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Victoria DePaul of GypsyWolf Productions MIKE FENN

Philadelphia's local storytelling scene, which only gets stronger as the months go on, is about to expand beyond its mission of entertaining audiences with terrific stories by gifted performers and help out the less fortunate.

On Wednesday, Sept. 28, the Spill the Beans storytelling show will grace the gorgeous Le'Tage stage for its bimonthly performance. However, according to the show's creator, local storyteller, comedian, and actress Victoria DePaul of Gypsywolf Productions, this month's effort will be a bit different from the event's three prior shows.

"I plan to match the amount of money we make at the door and donate it to a homelessness charity," DePaul says. "After looking around, I felt like Project Home was a great one to choose, as they are groundbreaking in the programs they have developed to help lift people up and out of homelessness."

DePaul says the issue is particularly meaningful to her because she has friends who are or have been homeless. In addition to matching donations, she also plans to have a box at the show where audience members can donate goods that will be delivered to known homeless camps throughout the city.

"We will collect personal items like toothbrushes, toothpaste, soap with a plastic holder, clean socks [an important and often overlooked item], snack bars, water bottles, etc.," DePaul said. "Even if we don't make much or have much to donate, I feel like every little bit helps."

Fittingly, the theme for the September Spill the Beans show is "Finding Your Way Home." DePaul chose the theme not only for its obvious tie to the donation effort, but also because its ambiguity can be interpreted by the storyteller lineup any number of ways.

"I like themes that force people to rummage through their closet of memories for old experiences or creep through the attic of their life for that old, forgotten thing that maybe they weren't ready or willing to appreciate then but now have new eyes to see it," DePaul said.

Past Spill the Beans themes have included "Off the Rails," "What Dreams are Made of," and "Worst Job Ever."

Tickets for Spill the Beans: Finding Your Way Home are $8 and can be purchased at the door. Additionally, audience members are also encouraged to bring an item to donate to the homeless effort.

5 Fall home weekend projects

What to do now for a safer, cheaper, cozier winter.

MONICA WEYMOUTH
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Get a few tasks out of the way now so you're smooth sailing all winter. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

There's nothing better than that first day you step outside and realize it's fall, the season of cozy cardigans and crunchy leaves and pumpkin spice. And, ahem, home maintenance. At the risk of souring that caramel apple, now is the time to prepare your home for the harsh months ahead. We checked in with renovation and design expert Frank Fontana, who along with his wife, Sherry, will spend this fall revamping historic homes on their new series for FYI, "Downtown Shabby." Here's what's on his personal to-do list. (And by his, we mean Sherry's.)

Show your deck some love

After enjoying it all summer, the least you can do is protect your deck over the winter. "Give a quick top coat to wood porches and decks," says Fontana. "To add years, it's always a good idea to give them a sand and seal to prepare for the harsh, wet storms to come."

Tuck your yard in

It's important to ready your yard for the long winter's nap ahead. Fontana recommends giving the grass one last mow and seeding to ensure a greener spring, as well as tidying up loose branches and garden debris before they do you dirty when covered in snow. (Don't have a yard? Join us in feeling smug on the fire escape.)

Seal out those drafts

It only takes one fall afternoon to save money and energy all winter. "Caulk is a carpenter's best friend and can be a budget-saver by keeping heat in the house around the windows," says Fontana. "Check all windows for deteriorating caulk areas and reglaze if needed. And believe it or not, heavy curtains and window treatments can provide a layer of weatherproofing."

Go mold hunting

If your home is older, mold should be on your maintenance radar. "Since older homes tend to have lots of spaces and gaps where moisture can seep in from settling and shifting, mold testing is always on the top of this list," says Fontana. "Get an air-quality test once a year to assure old walls aren't collecting moisture and mold. It's less of a project, but a headache if you find it." Consider our fingers crossed.

Get in the gutters

Don't want to spend January shoveling snow off your sofa? Pay the roof a visit now. "Sherry likes to remind me to get up on the roof and get those gutters clean before winter hits by leaving the ladder on the front porch with a hand rake," says Fontana. "Cleaning out gutters before winter is crucial to avoid freezing and blockage during wet and freezing spells, which will cause water to overflow and create dangerous icicles and water dams."

This is a key fall home task.

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Patriots (1-0)

No Brady, no Gronk, no problem. All the Patriots did is walk into Arizona and walk out with a win. This was the first time the Pats were underdogs in a season opener since Drew Bledsoe was the starting quarterback. It might be the last time they are this season.

Broncos (1-0)

Credit the Broncos for adjusting at halftime to the adjustments the Panthers had made following their Super Bowl defeat. Credit Trevor Siemian for pulling out the victory in his first start. Just don't credit the refs for their performance re: illegal hits on Cam Newton.

No. 3

Steelers (1-0)

Washington dared Antonio Brown to beat them, and he did. Handily. Brown's 126 yards and two touchdowns were matched by 155 yards and two more scores on the ground from DeAngelo Williams. The Steelers showed they're just fine without Le'Veon Bell.

No. 4

Panthers (0-1)

Kelvin Benjamin returned to the field, got his catches and survived a hard hit. The Panthers were ready to defend the Broncos' edge rushers they couldn't handle in the Super Bowl. But the treatment — or lack thereof — of Cam Newton at the end of the game will be a black eye.

No. 5

Seahawks (1-0)

That wasn't the season opening performance you wanted to see from the Seahawks, injury to Russell Wilson or no. Going forward, that will be a big concern for Seattle. The positives are the defense limiting Adam Gase's new team to 214 net yards and Arian Foster to 38 yards.

No. 6

Cardinals (0-1)

The Cardinals may struggle for a long time to figure out how they lost to New England. They outgained the Patriots. They won the turnover battle. They came up short. The real star for Arizona was 33-year-old wonder Larry Fitzgerald who caught two touchdowns.

No. 7

Packers (1-0)

While Jordy Nelson's longest reception being 8 yards is hopefully not the new normal, Packers fans could rejoice to see him in the endzone again. Aaron Rodgers did exactly what you expect, but the defense did a surprisingly good job against a Jaguars offense that has bite.

No. 8

Bengals (1-0)

Is the road win against a quality opponent more or less impressive when you remember the Bengals let Andy Dalton get sacked seven (seven!) times? The Bengals didn't seem to need receivers besides A.J. Green while he was hauling in 12 catches for 180 yards and a score.

No. 9

Chiefs (1-0)

Most teams use a pump-up video to review last season. Kansas City decided to turn it's opening game of 2016 into a microcosm of 2015. The Chiefs fell behind by 21 points to the woeful Chargers before a 17 point fourth quarter rally dragged them into OT.

No. 10

Texans (1-0)

Brock Osweiler and Lamar Miller took care of business in their Texan debuts. Miller ran for 106 yards and Osweiler threw two touchdown passes, but the surprise of the day was rookie Will Fuller, who caught one of those touchdowns and racked up 107 receiving yards.

No. 22

Eagles (1-0)

The last minute decision to trade Sam Bradford away made the Eagles objectively worse. But not to the fans. All anyone cares about in Philly is seeing Carson Wentz, and after a 278 yard, two touchdown debut, now all they care about is seeing more of him.

Why Wentz will be worse in Week 2

If you are reading this article, you know how well Carson Wentz played Sunday against the Browns in his NFL debut. He was able to handle blitz pressure, was on the same page as his receivers, threw the long and short ball and commanded the two minute drill. All in all, he looks like an NFL-ready quarterback.

But Week 2, on Monday night (under the ESPN lights) against Chicago will present a slew of new challenges for Wentz, and could see his level of play drop significantly. Here's why:

He has a book

Prior to Sunday's 29-10 win against Cleveland, there was virtually no film on Wentz for a defense to study. He ran fewer than 40 snaps in the preseason before getting a rib injury that sidelined him for the final three games and played his college ball at North Dakota State, a school in a conference without a major television contract. Simply put, the Browns defense didn't know what to expect. The Bears, under veteran coach John Fox, will do their homework. They will watch his tendencies, his technique, and go over what went well and what didn't for the Browns defense.

Carson Wentz GETTY IMAGES

No Zach Ertz

Watching Wentz' performance Sunday it was clear that the tight end position was sort of his fail-safe. If he couldn't air it downfield, he usually found a safe throw to Zach Ertz or Brent Celek.

Unfortunately for the Eagles, Ertz is listed as week-to-week with a strange and dangerous injury to his rib cage up around the shoulder. Many surmise he will be unable to play Monday night — taking away a big powerful weapon for Wentz.

The Bears defense

In their opening day loss to the Texans, Chicago posted some respectable numbers. They sacked Brock Osweiler five times, allowed just 215 passing yards, and had both an interception and forced fumble. There should be a considerable step up in quality from the Browns to Bears defensively this week. EVAN MACY

Phillies, GM Klentak have made a mess of Hellickson

The Phillies failed to trade the hurler at the deadline and will be between a rock and a hard place with him this offseason.

ZANE STALBERG
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Entering the 2016 season, the Philadelphia Phillies fielded a roster with very little trade value at any position. With many of their former stars, such as Ryan Howard rapidly declining, and their adamant stance to build from within, Matt Klentak and his front office had very little to work with in any trade talks.

After acquiring Charlie Morton and Jeremy Hellickson, however, one area of strength they had to trade from was back-end rotational depth. As soon as Morton and Hellickson were acquired the assumption was that they would be dealt at the deadline once the Phillies' younger arms were ready.

The Charlie Morton experiment failed. Philadelphia lost the former Pirate to a torn hamstring in April. Hellickson, on the other hand, was everything they could have asked for. The 29-year-old had an 8-7 record and 3.70 ERA, before the deadline, and became one of the more desirable pitchers in a weak trade deadline market.

However, despite interest from a plethora of teams, Aug. 1 came and went, and so did the non-waiver trade deadline, and Hellickson was still on Philadelphia's roster.

Today, Hellickson is still on Philadelphia's roster as a result of Klentak's gamble. A gamble that is starting to look less and less like a calculated risk and more like a costly mistake.

In his first three starts after the deadline, Hellickson posted a 2.89 ERA and struck out 18 batters. In his next three starts, however, the veteran right-hander had a 6.75 ERA against the Marlins, Mets and Braves, who, out of 30 teams, rank 26th, 27th, and 29th, respectively, in total team offense.

Hellickson rebounded nicely against Pittsburgh Monday night, allowing no earned runs and striking out six, but if he fails to regain that form consistently, his recent stretch of poor starts may be a precursor to the costly repercussions.

On one hand, Philadelphia can extend Hellickson a qualifying offer, which would likely be upward of $17 million, and hope he rejects it so they can receive a supplemental draft pick. Although, given Hellickson's affinity for Philadelphia and the small chance that he makes that kind of money on the open market, that seems unlikely. And if he does stay, anything less than the numbers he posted before the deadline and the Phillies will likely be forced to retain him at the 2017 deadline.

HELLICKSON, WHO IS 11-9 ON THE YEAR, BOASTS HIS BEST ERA SINCE 2012.

On the other hand, Philadelphia can simply let Hellickson walk, having received nothing for him, in one of the weakest pitching markets in years. Which, given the alternative, would be the better, cost-effective option.

Klentak and the Phillies, are building something in Philadelphia, but retaining Hellickson could very well prove to be a move that hampers their ability to negotiate in the upcoming season, and will, in all likelihood, be a disappointing missed opportunity.

Jeremy Hellickson's stellar pitching is making the Phillies impending offseason decision on him more difficult. GETTY IMAGES

Aries Do a little soul-searching and consider what's truly important. A positive change in your love life will be the result of a personal change you make.

Taurus Don't feel the need to buy someone's love. If you use your imagination, you'll come up with a nice way to do something special for someone without spending much.

Gemini A partnership should be questioned. If someone is being emotionally manipulative, you are best off taking a step back and evaluating the relationship.

Cancer Participate in events that make you feel good. Make domestic alterations that will enrich your life. Don't let work come between you and a loved one.

Leo Get busy and active. Emphasizing physical fitness and striving to reach your personal goals will energize you and give you incentive to work harder.

Virgo Use your knowledge and experience wisely. Take part in educational events or engage in activities that you can enjoy with a friend or your family.

Libra Take the initiative to put your ideas and plans into play. It's up to you to explore possibilities and make suggestions that can help you reach your goals.

Scorpio You should put greater effort into making positive changes to your home or lifestyle. Certain changes will encourage you to grow emotionally and spiritually.

Sagittarius You'll face a multitude of challenges if you expect too much or let someone make decisions for you. Focus on self-improvement.

Capricorn Making the right gesture or not acting on an assumption will play an important role in the way things transpire today. If you overreact, you could make mistake.

Aquarius Go after your goals and get involved in organizations or events that will help you bring about personal change. A medical issue will turn out favorably.

Pisces Your emotions will take charge if you don't allow enough time to gather the facts and listen to others' suggestions and solutions. EUGENIA LAST
